EAHEA Quality Assurance Certification

The European Association for Higher Education Advancement standards become an easy and effective instrument for measuring institutional education quality on the international level because they are not affected by local legislative formats, regulations, or cultural idiosyncrasies.

EAHEA certifies institutions and educational providers who meet its Quality Standards for higher education. All standards highlight best practices at all levels of education and training and are adaptable to a variety of needs and situations.

Educational providers use Quality Assurance Certification to verify that they are operating according to the best industry practices. They also find that the Quality Standards program helps to set them well on a path of continuous improvement.

The accreditation standards set forth by the EAHEA are:

1. Administrative Responsibility

The accreditation of administrative responsibility refers to results associated with the legal status, facilities, financial stability, and staff of the institution as well as its commitment to ethical values and continuous improvement. The applicant higher education institution must demonstrate its administrative capacity, stability, and responsibility.

The following set of standards will guide the institution to achieve the desired administrative responsibility.
